Divine Mercy Sunday

A Note From Fr. Jim Kinney

Most of us by now have heard the phrase, "doubting Thomas", and probably a large number of that group have come to understand that the apostle served a very worthwhile purpose in speaking what many had in their hearts without verbalizing those doubts as Thomas did. With or without such doubts, the important thing is to ultimately believe in the risen Christ however we arrive at that belief in our hearts. It's the destination that makes the true difference, not necessarily the route we take that gets us there. And for each and everyone of us there is a unique path that marks us as the special individuals that God has created for our own unique gospel story- the good news that reflects God's work with facets as numerous as the sands on the seashore.

When we seek the truth as Thomas did, we should recognize the ongoing work of theologians who also probe the depths of God's creation looking for understandings of God that are often as elusive as the distant galaxies yet to reveal themselves to the sharpest, prying eyes of astrophysicists. Mystic philosopher Teilhard de Chardin saw Christ as the center of the universe and called for a new religion of the earth rather than a religion of heaven. In his talk to the United Nations he said: "The crises of our times are challenging the world religions to release a new spiritual force transcending religious, cultural boundaries into a new consciousness of the oneness of the human community and so putting into effect a spiritual dynamic toward the solution of world problems . . . We affirm a new spirituality, divested of insularity and directed toward a planetary consciousness."

Blessings, Fr. Jim

"To withdraw from creatures and repose with Jesus in the Tabernacle is my delight; there I can hide myself and seek rest.
