A Note From Fr. Jim Kinney

Before I did any serious biblical or theological studies I had, like many young people of my age, a horrific understanding of the end times and Jesus' second coming. Today's first reading and the gospel might seem to be going a bit in that direction but, with a closer reading, are much more consoling. The key idea is to be prepared for his coming and when you think about it that preparation is the gist, or at least should be, the heart of what we do everyday as followers of Christ.

Daniel prophesied that the wise will shine brightly like the splendor of the firmament. In other words, those living the way of the Lord and for the Lord will live eternally with him in heaven. The wise are those who live continually as good Christians, spreading the good news, living the gospel and acting with charity, humility and love. They are at the ready knowing that God could return any day at any moment.

Yes, we are experiencing tribulation and the world seems to be growing darker. But for those who are usually attentive to Christ in their midst, that foreboding darkness should hone- not dull- the visual and audible acuity of our hearts. Pope Francis tells us that "times change and we Christians must continually change." Today's readings could hardly be more appropriate for us as we live within this current era of change. We Christians have an apocalyptic vocation. Our faith leaves us no room to moan or spread fear about what is happening but to cultivate attitudes and behavior that proclaim, "God does not abandon us."

Blessings, Fr. Jim
